(A) the defendant has previously been convicted of a Federal offense that is

The United States reserves the right to raise additional arguments or file additional pleadings in support of detention that may not have been included in this preliminary pleading.

PART II – Nature and Circumstances of the Offense and Weight of Evidence

The defendant committed an intentional arson of an overturned police patrol car on a major city thoroughfare. His dangerous and criminal behavior endangered protestors, rioters, and first responders alike. By its very nature, arson involves a grave threat to life and property. The facts of the offense weigh in favor of detention.

The weight of the evidence also supports the defendant's continued detention. More specifically, video footage of the May 30, 2010 riot in downtown Salt Lake City depicts the defendant kneeling next to the patrol car. No other rioters or protesters can be observed in the defendant's immediate proximity. There, the defendant can be seen in the video manipulating something in his hands. As the defendant stands up and backs away from the patrol car smoke begins arising from the location where the defendant was kneeling. A few seconds later, the defendant re-approaches the patrol car where he pours an apparent liquid accelerant. Flames immediately begin to swell and the vehicle becomes engulfed by fire.
